A Mormon Romance. From the Trinidad (Colorado) Enterprise.] CHAPTER I-THE MORMON'S DEPARTURE

The morning on which Reginald Glo-erson was to leave Great Salt Lake lity with a mule train dawned beautiully. Reginald Gloverson was a young and thrifty Mormon, with an interesting family of twenty young and handsome wives.

His unions had never been blessed with children. As often as once a year with children. As often as once a year he used to go to Omaha, in Nebraska, with a mule train for goods; but, although he had performed the rather perilous journey many times with entire safety, his heart was strangely sad on this particular morning, and filled with gloomy forebodings.

The time for his departure had arrived—the high-spirited mules were at the door, impatiently champing their bits. The Mormon stood sadly among his weeping wives.

weeping wives.
"Dearest ones," he said, "I am singu-larly sad at heart this morning; but do Jarly sad at heart this morning; but do not let this depress you. The journey is a perilous one, but—pshaw! I have always come back safely heretofore, and why should I fear? Besides, I know that every night, as I lay down on the broad, starlit prairie, your bright faces will come to me in my dreams, and make my slumber sweet and gentle. You, Emily, with your mild blue eyes, and you, Henrietta, with your splendid black hair; and you, Nelly, with your hair so brightly, beautifully golden; and you, Mollie, with your checks so downy; and you, Betsy, with your—with your—that is to say, Sasan, with your—and the other thirteen of you, each so good and beautiful, will

"Our own," they lovingly chimed, "we "And so, farewell!" cried Reginald.

"Come to my arms, my own!" he cried,
"that is, as many of you as can do it conveniently at once, for I must away."
He folded several of them to his throb-But he had not gone far when the race of the off-hind mule became untrace of the off-hind mule became un-hitched. Dismounting, he essayed to adjust the trace; but ere he had fairly commenced the task, the mule, a singu-larly refractory animal, snorted wildly and kicked Reginald frightfully in the stomach. He arose with difficulty and tottered feebly toward his mother's house, which was near by, falling dead in her yard, with the remark, "Dear mother, I've come home to dia!"

"So I see," she said; "where's the mules?"

Alast Reginald Gloverson could give o auswer. In vain the heart-stricken mother threw herself upon his inanimate form, crying, "Oh, my son, my son! only tell me where the mules are, and then you may die if you want to." CHAPTER IL .- FUNERAL TRAPPINGS.

The mules were never found.

Reginald's heart-broken mother took the body house to her unfortunate son's written by her own hard, very emphatiwidows. But before her arrival, she indiscreetly sent a boy to burst the news gently to the afflicted wives, which he did by informing them, in a hoarse whisper, that their "old man had gone in."

The wives felt very badly indeed.
"Ho was devoted to me," sobbed

"And to me," said Maria.
"Yes," said Emily, "he thought considerably of you, but not so much as he did of me."

"I say he did!"
"And I say he didn't!"
"He did!" "He did"
"He didn't!"

mistake. Excuse these real tears, but you've never felt a parent's feelings." "It's an oversight," sobbed Maria. "Do not blame us!"

CHAPTER III-DUST TO DUST. The funeral passed off in a very pleas ant manner, nothing occurring to mar the barmony of the occasion. By a mappy thought of Reginald's mother, the wives walked to the grave twenty abreast, which rendered that part of the ceremony

THE DEAD ALIVE.

Corpse Protests Against Burial Exciting Scene in a Churchyard.

The following remarkable story is sent The following remarkable story is sent us by a correspondent in Des Moines. Iowa. Margaret Anderson, a girl about twenty years of age, a Dane by birth, and a resident of Big Spring Station in that State, was taken suddenly sick on the 3d of September, and after a severe illness of about three weeks bid her sorrowing friends good-bye, and her spirit took its flight to that bourne from whence no traveler returns. At least so the situation presented itself to her sorrowing friends, and to all human appearances nobody was ever more really dead. ances nobody was ever more really dead and no case more hopelessly "past all surgery." On the second day after she had apparently breathed her last, a rude coffin was provided, and the friends con-cluded that the remains should be tem-

After an absence of an bour, the men returned to the hour, the men returned to the grave, and as they were about to resume work with their shovels, imagine their surprise at hearing a terrible commotion as of thumping and kicking inside the coffin.

Frightened half out of their senses, the now, sir, let me receive no more impermourners fled precipitately from the grave, fully convinced that the ghost of the departed one had took possession of the coffin. Of course not one of the spectators of the startling scene could be persuaded to return to the grave. Finally, however, an incredulous indi-vidual, to whom the story had been related, volunteered to proceed to the spot and investigate the affair. Upon reaching the grave side, he too, was horreaching the grave side, he too, was horror struck at hearing strange mutterings, accompanied by kickings and howlings, inside the coffin. Being less easily deterred than those who had preceded him, he picked up the coffin, and he backed it to the nearest residence, where the coffin lid was removed, when, lo! and behold, there lay the supposed corpse with eyes wide open, and as sprightly as could be expected of a person two days dead. This is as much of the story as is necessary to be told. Margaret's family necessary to be told. Margaret's family and relations, who lived in another part of the State, who mourned her as dead, received a letter from her a day

Letter from Pope Puis, The following was sent by the Pope to General Kanzler on the evening before the Italian troops entered the city: GENERAL: Now that a grand sacrifics as well as the most enormous injustice, is about to be consummated—now that the troops of a Catholic king, without even the semblance of a motive, are besieging the capital of the Catholic world. I feel the immediate necessity of thanking you, General, and all our troops for the generous conduct which you have shown hitherto, for the affection of which we have given proof to the Holy See. you have given proof to the Holy See and for your readiness to devote yourself solely to the defense of this metropolis. What Explanation.

The treatment of prisoners especially was a subject of bitter resentment and reproach on both sides. With reference to this disputed matter some statistics have been published, which are decidedly interesting. We give them as stated by Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, in his hook on the ways and they may be the state of on the war, and they may go for what they are worth. According to Mr. S., "a larger number of Confederates died in Northern than of Federals in Southhoroughly impartial.

That night the twenty wives, with teary hearts, sought their twenty respective couches.

In another house, not many leagues from the bouse of mourning, a grayment woman was weeping passionately.

CHAPTER IV—MARRIED AGAIN.

Two years clapse between the third and fourth chapters. A manly Mormon, one evening, as the sun was preparing to set among a select assortment of gold and crimson clouds in the western horizon—although for that matter the sun has a right to "set" where it wants to, and so, I may add, has a hen—a manly Mormon, I say, tapped gently at the door of the mansion of the late Reginald Gloverson.

The door was opened by Mrs. Susan Gloverson.

The door was opened by Mrs. Susan shover twelve.

"Is this the house of the widow Glover twelve.

"It is," said Susan.

"And how many is there of she?" indired the Mormon.

"There is about twenty of her, including ane," returned Susan.

"Can I see her?"

being mustered out, it finally broke ranks in the streets of Milwaukee. I shall never forget a brief conversation I heard between a cipizen and one of the soldiers who had just stepped out of the ranks. After the ordinary salutations, 'Well, said the citizen, 'well, John, you must have seen a good many tough sights' 'Yes,' said John, 'I would not tell what I had seen for a hundred thousand dollars, and I would not see it again for a hundred millions!'
